NEW ADVERTISEMENTS

Tom Pennington was a very fine fellow, and he was fortunate enough to marry a very pretty wife. In fact, Laura Pennington had been quite a belle, and must have had any one of half a dozen eligible husbands, but it so happened that she selected the one who was the best.

ally after a little respectful evasion, she had given an affirmative answer to his question. "Is this the well, for as I have already said, Tom was in a fever, and I have been able to think there were other quarters in which his distress would have been perceptible. However, he was devotedly attended to Laura, and in due time, that is, about as the young lady could get ready for bed, he was able to get up. As Tom's condition pointed generally, they were married. Tom bought a nice little house for his bride, and furnished it prettily, and commenced house-keeping with a very good prospect of happiness. It was in a pleasant house, and she was a very good man-hence, for, only six months after the marriage, in consequence of a very slight misunderstanding, their happiness was suffering shipwreck.

Did I say that Tom had one great fault? Plainly it was this. He was very much addicted to jealousy, and what Shakspeare says :—
 —'Tide- light as air could apply very well. What made him so susceptible in the present case was that he well knew that his wife's hand had been sought by others before her marriage to him. He also knew that she was not unusual in a pretty woman, for admiration.

One forenoon he had occasion to return home unexpectedly about eleven o'clock, and he found that he had neglected the search of a letter which he was required to answer.

As he came in sight of his easy chair, he could not help feeling how fortunate he was in the possession of so good a wife with a varied business, likely

At this painful juncture he arrived at his house, and looking casually the front window, he saw a spectacle which filled him with anger and dismay. A man was kneeling at his wife's feet, groaning in spirit. All his happiness dashed to the ground. Hereafter he thought for him there was nothing to hope.

His wife had deceived him. She was lying to receive the attention of other men in the absence of her husband, and he had no more confidence in her.

"What should he do?" he asked himself.

Should he burst upon the wretched couple and pour out upon them the torrent of righteous indignation? Should he wait for the wretched Mills, and inflict his summary chastigation? Or should appet to the duello, and challenge to personal combat? He thought of all, but he could not make up his mind to either. He felt that a wife so frivolous and sincere was not worthy that he should give his life for her. Besides, all this would be public scandal, and from that he shrank.

He would leave her forever. Y was determined upon that. He could no more confide in her—he could no more comfort in her society. Forth she must be to him as if she had been his wife. He accordingly resisted the temptation to enter the house, and Dinner was on the table at half twelve, and Laura was a little surprised her husband had not made his appearance. Usually he was very punctual. Still, on such a surprising evening, after the half an hour, he still came not. A half hour passed, and thinking that I might have detained him, she sat down cheerlessly to her solitary meal. She had about half completed it after the boy's departure, sat down to read it. But her tranquility was disturbed. With a flushed face atracted brow she read the following:

the most blessed of husbands. And I should have been so deceived in you

Singular as it may seem, Lau feeling on reading this letter was amusement. She laughed out loud.

Then came the thought that he in earnest after all ; that at any rate think it strange that she herself knew this, she continued hurriedly, "I went off in such a hurry that I had time to speak to him."

"I'll be think of going further."

"It was all the information she could obtain. She informed, however, that her husband had gone to New York, and this information was confirmed by a neighbor whom she met on her way home, and who assured her that her husband had been called to New York suddenly, and would be back in a few days."

"Yes," she said quickly. "Did you see him to-day?"

"I just spoke to him a minute as he was hurrying to the depot, but he was in so great haste that I only had a chance to ask him where he was going."

Laura's resolve was taken. She would go to New York herself. Her husband must be disabused of his false impression with regard to her as soon as possible.

Accordingly, she had a trunk packed, and the next morning she was on her way to New York, and when the evening train started it carried Laura as one of its five hundred passengers.

As the train moved on, the train rattled to the depot.

Laura knew that her husband always stopped at the St. Nicholas, and she took a hack to that place. In due time she was set down at the entrance of the hotel.

Entering, she requested permission to look at the register. It should be mistaken after all, what should she do?

But she was not mistaken.

There, in a narrow band, indicating the writer's agitation, was revealed the name of "Thomas Pemberton, Russell."

"I should like to see that gentleman as soon as he is here," she said.

"It is so early he will not probably be down for an hour," returned the clerk. But he was mistaken.

Thomas Pemberton could not sleep on account of his perturbed state of mind, and at quite an early hour he rose from his bed and went down stairs.

Entering the hall, he started on seeing the back of a figure wearing a shawl and helmet which looked very familiar.

"How much that looks like Laura!" he thought. And then he began to think that this recollection now could only bring him pain and unending sorrow.

Mr. Pemberton leaning a step behind her, looked around suddenly, and uttered a half-exclamation as he recognized her husband.

"O Thomas!" she exclaimed, advancing towards him.

"O Mrs. Pemberton!" he exclaimed in astonishment. "What brings you here?"

"Do you ask?" she said reproachfully. "After that letter?"

"Say," he said, "this place is too public for any explanation. Come the favor to accompany me to the parlor."

At that time the parlor was entirely unoccupied.

Mr. Pemberton led in his wife, and seating her on a sofa, stood steadily before her. "Well?" he said.

"What did you mean by that cruel letter?" she said.

"Ask your own conscience," he rejoined. "You probably did not intend to have me witness the very striking spectacle of your lover kneeling at your feet in the house which I had provided for you. But chance, or rather good fortune brought this about. If you can explain this I shall be glad to listen."

"Is that all you have against me, Thomas?" she asked.

"All? Is it not enough?"

"That you should judge presently. Did you recognize the letter, as you call him?" she asked.

"Yes," he said, "Frank Mills," he said, grudgingly.

"And do you happen to remember Mr. Mills' initials?"

"Yes, he keeps a shoe store. But what has that to do with it?"

"Ouch. As he was passing the house I called him in, and desired him to take my measure for a new pair of shoes. To do this he was obliged to kneel. So you see there was not much romance about it, after all."

Japan.

The latest news from Japan is, that disturbances of a serious nature have taken place in Yokohama. The residence of the principal palace of the Shogun was broken into by a mob, and the castle and residence of the latter of his court set on fire and destroyed on the 10th of January. The widow of the former Shogun, who lived in the palace, were killed. It is said the mob consisted of the people of Yokohama who were attempting to rescue a sister of the Prince, the wife of the former Shogun. Two days after this outrage, the great palace of Prince Satsuma in Yokohama was attacked, and destroyed by Shogun troops and a large amount of the prince's property in other parts of the city were plundered or ruined. The officers of Shogun's army any intention to quarrel with Satsuma, but declare that they only wish to dislodge the hands of robbers who are holed in the palace, which were destroyed.

The ports of Higo and Osaka were formally proclaimed open to foreigners on the first of January, but trade had not yet commenced at either place owing to the disturbed condition of the country. The condition of the first settlers at the latter ports was very unpleasant. Their houses were of inferior description and provisions of all kinds were scarce and dear. The main settlement was located at Kure, a miserable fishing village two miles from Higo. The foreign Ministers were generally censured for selecting a site so inferior in every respect as that of the port of Higo.

Admiral Bell, of the United States Navy, was drowned at the mouth of Osaka river, on January 11th. The mouth of the river had been closed by a sand bar, which formed during a heavy storm. The Admiral had been waiting for several days to cross the bar when he finally started, accompanied by flag Lieutenant Reed and thirteen men in a boat from the Hartford. While passing over the bar going in the direction of Osaka, the boat capsized and all on board were drowned except three sailors. The bodies were recovered and buried near the mouth of Osaka river.

The Abyssinian War. Abyssinian advances from the head quarters of the army at Senale state that King Theodore is at his camp near the palace of Mugdala, where the English captives are confined. The Abyssinian monarch is said to be in a bad state in a military point of view. An engagement between the two armies is imminent and may take place at any moment.

Very few of the disaffected native chiefs now acknowledge any fealty to Theodore. The chief Kassa, ruler of the Tigre district, openly courts the favor of Major General Napier.

General Napier fears that this chief, whose political character is bad, aims at making a secret attack on him and consequently seeks to arrange and perfect a binding treaty of alliance with him so as to hold him answerable for his future acts.

Twenty-five thousand British troops of all classes have been landed at Zoula, and the advance of the Queen's army has reached within two days' march of Ontala, half way towards Magdala from the shore line, where it is very probable the expected battle will take place. The Egyptians, with a contingent embracing many Turks, are very near to Magdala, but they use no caution and still march on in a reckless manner without the sanction of the superior officer of the English army.

The English in the interior number about 20,000. The troops suffered considerably from the heat of the weather.

Advises from China to Jan 17th, bring the intelligence that Hon. Anson Burlingame, the Chinese Ambassador to the treaty powers, leaves China for San Francisco Feb. 25th. His suite consists of thirty persons and includes J. McLeary Brown, late Secretary of British Legation to China, first secretary, and E. Duchamps, who accompanied Burlingame to the Empire last year, second secretary. Two Chinese officers of the highest rank proceed with Mr. Burlingame as advisers, but by Imperial decree Mr. Burlingame has been placed at the head of the mission. He has letters of credence to each of the treaty powers signed for the first time by the Emperor himself. The mission is to be permanent as soon as the Chinese officials fit themselves for foreign diplomatic duties. This mission is regarded by residents of China as the greatest step in advance ever taken by the Empire.

The United States double-ended Ashcroft will take Hon. Anson Burlingame to Hankow. All other men-of-war of the American squadron are at Nagasaki, Yokohama and Hanoi. Everything is quiet at the river and coast ports. An exploring party under the guidance of a noted engineer has started up Yangtze river from Hankow, and will try to cross the Snowy mountains and reach Calcutta by the Brahmaputra river. Great scientific results are expected if the expedition gets through safely.

A terrible earthquake has occurred in the island of Ponosa. Thirty thousand lives were lost.

A married woman in Detroit, who had gained the ill-will of several of her female friends, was recently invited into a neighbor's house, where five of her enemies had assembled for the purpose of giving her a sound beating. They were all armed with sticks and shovels, and the latter, which was thrown at her, she fought with energy, and soon succeeded in making invalids of all of her antagonists.

About Home.

Rescued.—This morning a horse named Massie, Patten & Freeborn, with wagon attached, started from in front of Davis's Bakery on Broad street and came down the street full tilt, bringing up against a horse-sleigh belonging to Gen. George W. Tew standing in front of Mr. John A. Stary's market, breaking the shafts of the wagon he was hauled to and smashing things generally. Gen. Tew's horse escaped injury by the skin of its teeth, and the runaway was soon after stopped from doing further damage.

Monks.—Runaway horses should be carefully secured and should always be accompanied by a light weight and strong man when left where there are no holding posts.

Good Templars' Meeting.—The public meeting of the Good Templars, which has been previously mentioned, is to be held in the State House at 7 o'clock, this evening. The exercises, we are informed will be, an invocation by Rev. Mr. Manning, followed by Wm. D. Lake, Esq., with introductory remarks, addresses by Capt. J. A. Jackson and Mr. Wm. H. Cotton, a poem by C. W. Dyer, an ode by B. W. Potter, Esq., and an essay by a lady, all of whom are members of the Lodge. The Newport Golf Club are expected to furnish music, and this fact itself will attract an audience, aside from the interest in the theme and the exercises of the occasion. All are invited to be present. The hall, we believe, will be filled.

That Horse.—We have been favored with a sort of prophetic glimpse of that race horse which was to appear tonight at Academy of Music. We can hardly be a doubt of his being a bonny jolly animal; he certainly moves his head round in a most natural (not to say superficial) manner and looks very much more the real horse than the daintily gaited beast at his side, which has clearly a horse-mane appearance. All we can say is, if he is not a real horse, he is very likely to be a real one (as the Italian—or Irish—Proverb says). At all events, none of the weather is propitious, we hope none of our citizens who can, will fail to go and judge for themselves.

Pier.—An alarm was sounded about half past nine, last evening, caused by the burning of a barn on William Street, belonging to Alexander Easton, a colored man. The building was destroyed together with its contents, except a horse which was got out in safety. Henry Burton's barn adjoining was injured by fire and its contents deluged with water. All Mr. Burton's horses were rescued. Engines Seven and Eight were first on the spot and although the Department was out, these two extinguished the fire which, being in the immediate vicinity of No. Eight, was chiefly subdued by that company. The snow which was falling at the time prevented the fire spreading to other roofs, by the clouds that were flying abundantly.

Children.—We are informed that a gentleman a few days since lost his purse containing $100. A little child chanced to see it drop and immediately ran after him, but being small and he walking very fast, she did not overtake him until after running quite a distance. The gentleman was of course much gratified to recover his money, and in the outpouring benevolence of his heart gave the child ten cents as a reward and encouragement for honesty.

Sales of Stock.—Samuel T. Merrill, auctioneer, last week sold two shares of Boston, Newport and New York Steamboat Company's stock at $150 a share, and ten shares of Newport Gas Light Company at $127.50. The par value of the Gas Light stock is $100.

The Boston Journal appeared in a new dress on Monday, which greatly improves its appearance and adds to its value as a first class newspaper.

We are indebted to Hon. T. A. Jencks for a copy of his speech on the Rights of American Citizens abroad, delivered in the House of Representatives on Thursday last.

Quarantine.—By our mistake, the acknowledgment of S. H. Cottrell & Co., that appears in our advertising columns, remained over from yesterday.

The New Bedford Standard says: A person skated all the way from Newport to that city, last week, on the ice on the road.

Masses Entombed.—We are again taken on times of supposed immortality. Lately we have heard the cry of "Fire!" "Fire!" resound through our streets, in careless indifference, owing to the many false alarms. Bells loudly ring only make us turn in our warm beds, shrug our shoulders and say, "Go it, you don't fool me, this time." Why is this? Simply because, if some half-fledged youngster or aspiring man wish to see the effects of his blunders and show what a mighty effort he is, he has only to sing out "Fire!" "Fire!" when Clang, Clang, goes the bells, and the engines come up, others down, and none to water, all according to plan. Hence, after a few doses, the respectable class of persons stay at home and cause the want of system which has full swing in our midst; whilst, like the wolf in the fable, thousands of dollars are being vanishing into air, valuable animals being consumed and still more valuable lives in jeopardy.

For the Daily News.

Mr. Entombed.—On taking up your paper of yesterday, I found several communications with regard to the caucus on Saturday evening. I have a deep interest in the character of our town, and with the writer of a well written article in your paper, "I have our grand old city with her church-hill memories and her ancient possibilities." But I am satisfied that the author of that article is laboring under an erroneous impression, implying as he does, that Newport does not respect the rights of new comers. Newport knows that a large share of her growth and prosperity depends upon new comers. She places them on an exact equality with regard to rights, and the exercise of those rights with the old citizens. But while she does this, she exercises the right of judging of new comers of their capacity, of their fitness, for the honors and responsibilities she has to bestow. She has but few honors to confer, and many individuals, who come here for the sake of honors, must, occasionally, meet with disappointment—as they would in any place in the country, where free competition is allowed. Newport cannot depart from her old principle of fair play in the contests of life. She has never been peculiar in the management of her local affairs, and her local institutions. The mode of electing officers, and the arrangement of caucuses for party purposes, are precisely the same as in other towns and States of the Union. If he has departed from common usage in any of his transactions, it has been only in one instance that I recollect, (viz.) that of the formation of a City Library, in the organization of which the citizens at large do not seem to have been called upon to participate. In that instance, the managers, probably, discovered some peculiar circumstances, which justified them in a departure from the old usage.

Now, on Saturday night, at the Caucus, the proceedings, to a certain point were exactly in accordance with established custom. The delegates to the Convention were nominated by a committee well known to this community. The men nominated were our present Representatives to the General Assembly. The vote was taken by the yeas and nays, and declared carried by the chairman. The delegates to the Convention were nominated by a committee well known to this community. The Senate in declining to agree to the appointment will, it is thought by some members of the military committee, pass a resolution eulogistic of General Sherman, and declaring the reasons why the proposed promotion is not given to him. Sherman's closest friends are more earnest than anybody else that Mr. Johnson shall be rebuffed for the indignity they say he has sought to put upon the lieutenant-general.

Intelligence from Hayti says that powerful influences have been brought to bear for the purpose of inducing Lord Stanley to remove the British minister from the government of Hayti. The reply of the British government is equivocal, but indicates that the minister will be removed. President Salazar is most indignant at the removal of the policy pursued in St. Domingo. He has serious trouble with that Republic. The entire southern portion of Hayti has revolted. Gen. Solomon has been proclaimed President, and at the capital there was great agitation. Sainte Marie and Comrie have revolted, and discontent is general.

Havana special says that the American Consul at Jamaica had confirmed interviews with Admiral Murray and Commodore McClintock. Sudden secret dispatches had been forwarded to Washington, and there were mysterious hints of negotiations relative to Honduras and the Cayman Islands.

Gen. Sherman.—Dixon telegraphed to Monday's Boston Advertiser: It is already entirely clear that the Senate will not confirm the President's nomination of Lieut. General Sherman to the brevet rank of general. He has sent dispatches to three or four different persons here protesting against the appointment in sharp terms, saying that it would be an insult to General Grant to confer this rank on any officer, and declaring that he is entirely satisfied with his present position in the army; he says the Senate ought to decline to confirm it at once, and that he will not accept the rank even if the nomination is confirmed. His dispatches convey an idea that he almost feels himself insulted in being mentioned for the new rank by the President, and leading members of both Houses are warm in praise of him for the manner in which he repels the imputation upon his manhood and his friendship for General Grant.

We are only enabled to do this by our connection with an extensive wholesale trade in New York County, and we purchase at the lowest rates.

EVERY POUND WANTED.

If the quality is not satisfactory it may be returned in exchange for any other kind of quality or price. The quality is guaranteed to be perfectly hygienic and palatable, and is not catch-penny stuff.

Cheese may be handled in any case.

If the whole number of packages are not sold at the day of delivery the proportionate number will be disposed of according to the above terms.

Wholesale and retail orders, for the purpose, will be a regular standard article. Other prices may be offered for sale by the same way. Now the sale in result is very large.
